Amtrak's Coast Starlight began on May 1, 1971 as a triweekly train between Washington, D.C., Portland, Oregon, and Los Angeles, California. It was the first transcontinental train service to use the recently completed southwest route through the Colorado Rockies and the Southern Rockies. The train was initially operated by Amtrak under contract with the Union Pacific Railroad, but in 1979, the route was transferred to the Santa Fe Railway (reporting mark ATS), now part of BNSF Railway.

The Coast Starlight is a popular train service that offers passengers the opportunity to experience the beauty and diversity of the American West. The route passes through some of the most scenic landscapes in the United States, including the Rocky Mountains, the desert Southwest, and the Pacific Northwest.

The exact route of the Coast Starlight varies depending on the season and train schedule, but it generally follows a path that starts in Los Angeles, California, and travels north through the desert and mountains of the Southwest, then through the Rocky Mountains, and finally through the Pacific Northwest. The train ends its journey in Seattle, Washington, after crossing the Puget Sound.

Over the years, the Coast Starlight has become an iconic symbol of the American West, and it continues to attract passengers who want to experience the beauty and charm of the region. The train offers a unique way to travel and explore the West, and it remains a popular destination for tourists and rail enthusiasts alike.
